Boero Yacht Coatings, part of Gruppo Boero's yachting division, has been announced as the technical partner for Ferrari Hypersail, a sailing monohull designed for offshore endurance racing under the leadership of team principal Giovanni Soldini.

As part of the partnership, Boero Yacht Coatings is contributing to the development of a complete coating system engineered to withstand extreme stress conditions and integrated into the vessel's overall performance architecture.

"Ferrari Hypersail was created to explore new frontiers of performance based on a fully integrated engineering approach," said Marco G. Ribigini, Ferrari Hypersail team leader. "Our collaboration with Boero Yacht Coatings has allowed us to develop and integrate a complete coating system designed to ensure maximum efficiency and reliability under the extreme conditions in which the vessel will operate. Method, discipline and attention to detail are values shared by both Ferrari and Boero."

Thickness optimisation is a key focus of the project, aiming to reduce weight without compromising durability or control. The topcoat, which serves as the finishing layer of the coating system, plays a strategic role in both engineering performance and environmental considerations. Reducing the thickness of each layer while maintaining effectiveness helps optimise the system for a vessel designed to fly over the water on foils.

"The partnership with Ferrari on the Hypersail project represents the convergence of two industrial cultures focused on research and continuous improvement," commented João Serrenho, CEO and president of CIN Coatings, the parent company of Gruppo Boero. "We share an approach based on precision and responsibility. The experience gained through this project strengthens our expertise and reinforces our capacity to bring tangible innovation to the market."
